KNIGHTS OF CALATRAVA

DAMES OF CALATRAVA

Knights of Calatrava - Our Members

In the modern era, being a knight has become less about the physical strength and more about the moral fortitude and uprightness of character. A modern-day knight is expected to conduct themselves in a manner that earns the respect and admiration of others, not through fear, but through the power of their example.

One of the primary characteristics of a modern-day knight is their unwavering sense of honour and integrity. They are true to their word, and their actions always reflect their values. They never compromise their principles, even in the face of adversity, and always do what is right, even if it is not the easiest or most popular choice.

A modern-day knight is also a role model for those around them. They understand that their actions have a ripple effect, and they strive to make a positive impact on the world around them. They inspire others to be their best selves, and they take an active role in helping others achieve their goals.

In addition to being a role model, a modern-day knight is also a protector. They use their strength and influence to lift others up, rather than to dominate or intimidate them. They are compassionate and empathetic, always willing to lend a listening ear or a helping hand to those in need. They understand that true strength comes from serving others, not from seeking power or control.

Ultimately, a modern-day knight is someone who lives their life with purpose and meaning. They are guided by a set of values that prioritizes honesty, integrity, and compassion above all else. They understand that the most significant battles are not fought on the battlefield, but rather in the hearts and minds of those around them. By living their lives in this way, they inspire others to do the same and create a world that is more just, compassionate, and full of hope.

BARONY OF MINSTER LOVEL

Baroness Jan de Avalon-Espinosa - Baron Gabriel Foster Espinosa

From the Middle Ages, virtually the whole parish was included in two principal manors, of which the larger belonged to the resident Lovel family from the early 12th century until the late 15th. The smaller, centered on Little Minster, was absorbed into the main Minster estate in the early 15th century. From the 17th century to the 19th the owners were the non-resident Cokes [pronounced Cook] of Norfolk, Earls of Leicester, who let the manor house and most of the land to tenants and bailiffs; the estate was largely broken up during the 19th century.

Minster Lovell Manor

Minster Lovel is also known as Lovell.

In 1086 Minster Lovell, assessed at 7 hides, was evidently in royal hands, having been formerly held by Earl Aubrey, William the Conqueror's appointee, as Earl of Northumberland from 1080 to 1081. Probably it was among lands granted by Henry I, before 1124 to William Lovel (or Luvel or Lupellus), one of a family with estates near Ivry in Normandy, which retained it until 1485.

Overlordship may have been acquired by William the Conqueror's brother-in-law Robert de Beaumont (1168), Earl of Leicester.

ROBERT DE BEAUMONT, 1ST EARL OF LEICESTER

Robert de Beaumont, 1st Earl of Leicester, also known as Robert of Meulan, Count of Meulan, was a powerful Norman nobleman, one of the companions of William the Conqueror during the Norman Conquest of England, and was revered as one of the wisest men of his age. Chroniclers spoke highly of his eloquence, his learning, and three kings of England valued his counsel. He was granted considerable lands in the Midlands by William and Henry I and made the Earl of Leicester.

(fn. 3) since in 1253 the manor was held by his successor Simon de Montfort (d. 1265), Earl of Leicester.

Simon de Montfort, the 6th Earl of Leicester, later sometimes referred to as Simon V de Montfort, to distinguish him from his namesake relatives, was a nobleman of French origin and a member of the English peerage, who led the baronial opposition to the rule of King Henry III of England, culminating in the Second Barons' War. Following his initial victories over royal forces, he became de facto ruler of the country, and played a major role in the constitutional development of England.

(fn. 4) and later by Edmund Crouchback (d. 1296), the king's son

EDMUND CROUCHBACK

Edmund Crouchback, Earl of Lancaster, Leicester, and Derby was a member of the House of Plantagenet. He was the second surviving son of King Henry III of England and Eleanor of Provence. In his childhood he had a claim on the Kingdom of Sicily; however, he never ruled there. He was granted all the lands of Simon de Montfort in 1265, and from 1267 he was titled Earl of Leicester. In that year he also began to rule Lancashire, but he did not take the title Earl of Lancaster until 1276. Between 1276 and 1284 he governed the counties of Champagne and Brie with his second wife, Blanche of Artois, in the name of her daughter Joan, and he was described in the English patent rolls as Earl of Lancaster and Champagne. His nickname, "Crouchback", refers to his participation in the Ninth Crusade.

(fn. 5) Thereafter, however, the overlordship was associated with the 'de Quincy' share of the barony of Leicester, passing to Alan la Zouche (d. 1314), and in the 1340s being reportedly in the king's hands as part of the de Quincys' forfeited honor of Winchester. (fn. 6)

In 1408 the overlord was the Duke of Lancaster, the future Henry V, following whose accession the manor was held in chief as of the duchy. (fn. 7) Throughout the 13th and 14th centuries the manor was assessed at ½ knight's fee, (fn. 8) but in the mid-15th century at 1/20 or 1/30 and in the mid-16th at 1/40 knight's fee. (fn. 9)

Henry V

Henry V is also called Henry of Monmouth, was King of England from 1413 until his death in 1422. Despite his relatively short reign, Henry's outstanding military successes in the Hundred Years' War against France made England one of the strongest military powers in Europe. Immortalized in Shakespeare's "Henriad" plays, Henry is known and celebrated as one of the greatest warrior kings of medieval England.

William Lovel (d. by 1170) was succeeded presumably by his son Waleran d'Ivry (d. c. 1177) and by Waleran's brother William Lovel (d. 1213), who, with his wife Isabel, held property in Minster Lovell in 1197. (fn. 10) The younger William's son John Lovel, a minor in 1213, briefly forfeited his lands in 1216 and 1223 and died in 1252, when his widow Katherine received a third in dower; the rest passed to their son John (d. 1287), knighted by 1265. (fn. 11) Following John's death the manor passed through the male line to John (d. 1310), 1st Lord Lovel, to John (d. 1314), 2nd Lord Lovel, and to his posthumous son John (d. 1347), whose lands remained in the king's wardship until 1333. (fn. 12) Two thirds of Minster Lovell were granted to Hugh Despenser in custody in 1325, (fn. 13) the rest being presumably held in dower by John's mother Maud (d. by 1341), who, with her second husband Sir John de Haudlo, received the two thirds in 1327. (fn. 14) John Lovel's son John died a minor in 1362, the manor having meanwhile been held by his mother Isabel (d. 1350) (fn. 15) and by the king's daughter Isabella. (fn. 16) It subsequently passed to the younger John's brother and heir, also John Lovel, who married Maud, daughter of Lord Holand, and who by 1380 was styled Lord of Titchmarsh and Holand. (fn. 17) Following his death in 1408 the manor passed to his widow Maud (d. 1423), grandson William Lovel (d. 1455), and great-grandson John (d. 1465), whose widow Joan (d. 1467) received it in dower. (fn. 18) Their son and heir Francis, of age in 1477, was created Viscount Lovel in 1482, but having fought for Richard III at Bosworth, he was attainted in 1485 and his lands escheated to the Crown. (fn. 19)

- [The Barrett Clan who originally came over from Normandy were noblemen, they settled in Ireland and Wales as landowners, royals and barons, they assisted Jasper Tudor and Henry Duke of York, on the field at the Battle of Bosworth. My mothers' family are Welsh Barrett from Swansea, however possibly they could have originated from County Cork in Barrett country Ireland.

Henry became King as Henry VII, and because of this: -

In 1486, Henry VII granted the manor for life to his uncle Jasper Tudor (d. 1495), Duke of Bedford. (fn. 20) Under an Act of 1495 the manor passed on Jasper's death to Henry, Duke of York (later to become Henry VIII), and reverted to the Crown in 1502. (fn. 21)

In the 1520s it was administered by various keepers and stewards appointed by the Crown, among them Sir William Compton and the courtier Sir Henry Norreys. In 1549 Edward VI granted it to John Dudley, Earl of Warwick and later Earl of Northumberland; (fn. 22) it was evidently exchanged with the king in 1550–1, however, (fn. 23) and was granted to Dudley's brother Andrew, a knight of the Privy Chamber. (fn. 24) Following the Dudley's execution in 1553 their lands were forfeited to Queen Mary, who seems at first to have allowed Northumberland's widow to retain them, but who subsequently received Minster Lovell in exchange for lands elsewhere. (fn. 25)

In 1560 the Crown sold the manor to Robert (later Sir Robert) Kelway and his wife Cecily, lessees from 1553 of the house and demesne farm, (fn. 26) from whom it passed to Robert's daughter Anne, who married Sir John Harrington. (fn. 27) Following a dispute in 1597, after Harrington tried to sell the entailed manor, it was settled on their daughter Lucy and her husband Edward Russell, Earl of Bedford, and in 1603 the Harrington's, having finally broken the entail, sold it to Sir Edward Coke, Attorney General to Elizabeth I and later chief justice of the King's Bench. (fn. 28)

From Sir Edward (d. 1634) the manor passed to his nephew Robert (d. 1673), and to Robert's son Edward (d. 1707). (fn. 29) Edward's son Thomas (d. 1759) was created Baron Lovel and, in 1744, Viscount Coke and Earl of Leicester, but his son Edward having predeceased him, the Coke titles became extinct, and the estate was settled on Thomas's sister's son Wenman Roberts, who took the surname Coke. (fn. 30) He came into possession in 1775, the estate having meanwhile been held by Thomas's widow Margaret. (fn. 31) Wenman Coke died in 1776, to be succeeded by his son Thomas Wenman Coke, MP, Earl of Leicester of the second creation from 1837, and known also as 'Coke or Cook of Norfolk'. (fn. 32) An Act of 1812 enabled the family to sell much of the manor the same year: (fn. 33) some farms were bought by occupying tenants, and in 1812–13 the manor farm and lordship were sold to the lawyer William (later Sir William) Elias Taunton, recorder of Oxford and later a justice of the king's bench. In 1821

he bought another lot from Henry Leake of Witney, and in 1825 acquired most of the land and cottages still belonging to the Cokes, who retained only 355 a. of woodland in 1840. (fn. 34) The woods, excepted from the sale of 1812, were sold in 1854 to J. R. Kimber and Robert Abraham, (fn. 35) thus ending the Cokes' connection with Minster Lovell.

Taunton was succeeded in 1835 by his widow Maria (d. 1872), (fn. 36) whose heirs or trustees sold the reduced estate to Robert Raikes in 1874. He sold it to a farmer, John Deane, in 1875. (fn. 37) It then comprised some 677 a., with two farmhouses (including Windrush Farm), the Swan Inn, fishing rights, and 26 cottages, as well as the ruins of Minster Lovell Hall (the medieval manor house) and the nearby Manor Farm. Deane's daughter Emily succeeded in 1887, (fn. 38) and in 1917 sold Manor Farm and its land, the ruins, and the lordship to Col. F. B. de Sales La Terrière. In 1934 his widow sold the Manor Farm estate, then less than 300 a., to J. R. Groome, owner of Minster Lovell Estates Ltd, who later sold it to University College, Oxford; (fn. 39) the ruins were given in 1935 to the Ministry of Works, (fn. 40) succeeded in 1984 by English Heritage. In the 1970s Manor Farm was bought by Sir Peter Parker, then Chairman of British Rail, who owned it at his death in 2002. Most of the land had by then been detached. (fn. 41)

[The Lordship Baron title to the Manor of Minster Lovel, as 'incorporeal hereditaments', were purchased in 2020 by Dr Jan de Avalon-Espinosa and Dr Gabriel Foster Espinosa.

A hereditament is defined by the Law of Property Act 1925, s 205(ix) as any property which on an intestacy occurring before 1 January 1926 might have devolved upon an heir. The term does not therefore include personal rights. Incorporeal hereditaments are intangible and can neither be seen nor handled.]

MANOR HOUSE (MINSTER LOVELL HALL)

Despite mention of a curia in 1197 (fn. 42) there is no unequivocal evidence that the Lovel's were permanently resident before the 15th century. There was presumably a house in 1279 when land was held in demesne, and a house with a hall, four chambers, and farm buildings, including barns and a stable, was mentioned in 1423. (fn. 43) Probably that was the house whose foundations were discovered under the east and west wings of the present house in 1937–9, (fn. 44) and foundations discovered under the present barns may also relate to this earlier complex.

The surviving U-plan house (Figs 66–9), abandoned and partially dismantled in the mid-18th century, was built for William Lovel in the 1430s, probably by remodeling the earlier one. Built of coursed limestone rubble with ashlar on the main façades, it stands on a gently sloping site immediately south-east of the church and was originally open to the river Windrush on the south side. (fn. 45) The main entrance was on the north side facing the church, along an elaborate cobbled path which led through a vaulted gateway beneath the chapel into the screens passage at the east end of the hall. In addition to the gateway, there were two rooms below the chapel, at least one of which was heated; the chapel itself apparently had windows like those in the church.

The principal rooms were on the north side of the courtyard behind the chapel. The hall was situated in the center and had exceptionally high walls (40 feet) to allow for windows on both sides; those on the north were positioned above the roof of the chapel. The main chamber was located immediately to the west of the hall and had a large solar above. The cobbled path through the gateway continued south towards the kitchen and stable located in the east wing, ending near a secondary gateway which apparently provided access to the farmyard. Only the foundations of the west wing survive, but it was apparently largely devoted to chambers, many of which were heated. A three-storied tower, with oriel windows on the upper floors facing south across the river, was added to the south-east corner of the west range in the later 15th century, and at the same time a wall was built across the south side of the courtyard, enclosing it completely.

Minster Lovell Hall from the south-east in 2000, showing surviving hall range.

Possibly the enclosing wall was partly defensive, but the house was primarily a high-status and imposing aristocratic residence used for entertaining on a grand scale: Richard III stayed there in 1483 as a guest of Francis Lovel, (fn. 46) and Henry VII visited in 1494, (fn. 47) while the nearby Minster woods were imparked in 1440 presumably for hunting. (fn. 48)

A complex of farm buildings immediately north-east of the house was probably built or rebuilt at the same time as the domestic buildings; those surviving include a circular dovecot and two large barns, all of coursed limestone rubble. The remains of at least one other structure, probably another barn, were discovered near the dovecot during excavation of a garden pond. (fn. 49) In the Middle Ages the farmyard probably extended further south alongside the house's east range, where yards (including a garden and hop yard) were mentioned in the early 18th century, together with a wood yard and another hop yard apparently west of the house adjoining the vicar's close. (fn. 50) Remains of fishponds survive south of the house near the river. (fn. 51)

Following the Lovells' forfeiture in 1485 the house was presumably occupied by bailiffs or lessees; the Kelway's lived there in the mid-16th century, (fn. 52) but by 1602 it was again leased with a demesne farm of up to 700 a., at first to Robert Williamson, (fn. 53) by the 1620s to the Ewre family, (fn. 54) and from the mid-17th century to the Wheelers, who occupied house and farm until c. 1700, and the house alone until the 1730s. (fn. 55) In 1665 John Wheeler was taxed on 18 hearths there. (fn. 56) Some work was carried out about 1607, in preparation for a visit by members of the Coke family: the work was largely repairs, (fn. 57) but may have included the construction of two new wings on the north side of the house at right angles to the main range. Both were of two storeys and were lit by cross-mullioned windows, but neither appears to have been heated. (fn. 58) Also during the early 17th century the two barns were reroofed, and a new granary and other outbuildings were constructed.

Minster Lovell Hall, showing building phases

By the early 18th century the Wheelers were apparently subletting the demesne to farmers occupying Manor Farm north of the churchyard, and in 1712 John Wheeler agreed to partition the farmyards and farm buildings, retaining for his own use the house and its courtyard, a stable in the south-east range, part of the yard to the east, and the wood yard and hop yard to the west, together with land south of the 'pool yard' (presumably near the river) and the 'old dog kennel'. (fn. 59) One of the family still occupied the house (with only 3½ a.) in 1730, when the main domestic ranges seem to have been in good repair, (fn. 60) but in 1747 the house was partially dismantled by the Cokes, who held an on-site sale of the materials. (fn. 61) The private room west of the hall was subsequently used as a barn and later as a cottage, before being entirely abandoned, and in the early 19th century the hall was unroofed and the site largely derelict. (fn. 62) The ruins were given to the Ministry of Works in 1935, (fn. 63) and remained open to the public in the early 21st century.

Minster Lovell Hall and church looking west, showing former vicarage house (top center), Hall, church, and Manor Farm (center), and Manor Farm's farmyard (bottom right)

Francis Lovel, lord of Minster Lovell manor in the late 15th century, was a close associate of Richard III and a leading rebel against the Tudor regime, reportedly killed at the battle of Stoke in 1487. A legend was circulated from the 1730s that he escaped and fled to Minster, and that a skeleton, supposedly his remains, was discovered in a hidden underground chamber during building work in 1708. That Lovel should have fled to Minster seems inconceivable, and no such vault has ever been found. (fn. 64)

MANOR FARM

In the mid to late 16th century the 12th-century chapel of St Cecilia, north of the churchyard, was converted into a small house known later as Manor Farm, presumably by lords of Minster Lovell manor: successive lords had been patrons of the chapel until its suppression at the Reformation, and the house belonged to the manor thereafter. (fn. 65) Possibly it was occupied in the 17th century by some of the Cokes' manorial bailiffs, (fn. 66) but no tenants are known before the early 18th century when the Wheelers (as lessees of Minster Lovell Hall) sublet it to a local farmer with all or part of the demesne. In 1712 most of the Hall's farmyards and agricultural buildings (including the dovecot and barns) were formally transferred to Manor Farm, which became the farmhouse for the former demesne, (fn. 67) remaining a working farmhouse until the late 20th century. The lessee in the mid-19th century was the prominent farmer John Gillett, who worked the manorial farm for the Taunton's; a succession of tenant farmers followed until, in the 1970s, the house was bought by Sir Peter Parker and separated from most of its land. (fn. 68)

Manor Farm from the churchyard, probably incorporating remains of the chapel of St Cecilia

At the house's conversion in the 16th century the large 12th-century arch which formerly gave access to the churchyard was blocked (Fig. 70), and a new entrance with a small pent-roofed porch was created on the north. The house was originally arranged as a hall with an east cross-wing projecting slightly to the north; the cross-wing was apparently heated only on the ground floor and retains a carved stone fireplace with a fourcentred opening in a traceries square surround, surmounted by a plain triangular pediment. The eastern end of the hall, and the passage between the hall and the cross-wing, were lit on the south by tall two-light windows with diamond-shaped mullions. Probably soon after its conversion the hall was floored and a stack inserted inside the west end, serving the rooms on both ground and first floors; fireplaces with depressed fourcentred heads survive on both levels. In the 19th century the house was extended to the east to provide additional kitchen and service accommodation, and probably at the same time the north gable end of the cross wing was partially rebuilt to extend it around the formerly external stack, and some new windows were inserted. The house was renovated about 1973, when dormers were added to convert the previously unused attic space into living accommodation, and new stairs were built. A large conservatory was added on the south-east side in the late 20th century.

LITTLE MINSTER MANOR

In 1066 and still in 1086 the 3-hide manor of Little Minster was held in chief, with numerous other lands, by the English Thegn Saewold. His tenant was Robert d'Oilly, (fn. 69) whose family subinfeudated it to the Chesneys before 1110, when Roger de Chesney granted tithes at Little Minster to Eynsham abbey. (fn. 70) The overlordship descended with the d'Oilly barony of Hook Norton, passing to Henry d'Oilly (d. 1232), his widow Maud and her second husband William de Cauntelo, and to the d'Oillys' heir Margaret, Countess of Warwick, and her husband John de Plessis (d. 1263), who succeeded after Margaret's and Maud's deaths in 1261. (fn. 71) The overlordship remained in the de Plessis family at Hugh de Plessis's death in 1349, (fn. 72) but was not mentioned later. The manor was usually assessed at ½ knight's fee, (fn. 73) and a part of it at ¼ fee in 1324. (fn. 74)

From Roger de Chesney the manor presumably passed with other Chesney lands to Hugh de Chesney (fl. 1163), Ralph de Chesney (d. c. 1195), and his daughter Lucy, who married Guy de Dive (d. 1218). (fn. 75) Between 1240 and 1250 it was held of the earl of Warwick by John and Margery de Cantelupe (i.e. Cauntelo?), and in 1279 by Margery alone, who seems to have leased some of it to Walter de Leckhampton. (fn. 76) In the 1320s Henry de Dive (d. 1327) still retained an interest, (fn. 77) but in 1302 and 1320 the lord was William de Cantelupe; he was succeeded before 1324 by Walter de Cantelupe, parson of Snitterfield (Warws.), who that year granted land and a mill at Little Minster to Aymer de Valence, earl of Pembroke, for life, with reversion to Thomas West, who held them about 1325. (fn. 78) By 1346 John Laundels (d. 1361), sheriff and escheator of Oxfordshire, held the manor, and a Laundels was still in possession in 1362. (fn. 79)

Part passed to the Lovells probably by 1408, when John and Maud Lovel held land in Little Minster called 'Laundelles'. (fn. 80) John and his grandson William Lovel increased their holding, and by 1465 John Lovel owned the manor with that of Minster. (fn. 81) Thereafter the two were regarded as a single manor.

LITTLE MINSTER MANOR HOUSE

No medieval manor house is known, though William Cantelupe, taxed in 1316 on goods worth 13s., may have had a demesne farm, and the 'site of the farm of Little Minster' was mentioned in 1588, when it was held by copy with 6 yardlands. (fn. 82) Possibly that was the 'mansion' or 'manor house' of Little Minster leased in the 17th century to Edward Heylyn (d. 1636) and his son Henry (d. 1695), who lived there; (fn. 83) Edward was brother of the Royalist theologian Peter Heylyn who, during the Civil War, took refuge in Little Minster. (fn. 84) Eighteenth-century lessees included the Peacocks of Asthall, and John, Earl Grandison, all of whom presumably sublet it. (fn. 85)

The house has not been identified but may have been called the 'Old Manor House' by 1935, when sold to Mrs. Bouverie-Pusey. (fn. 86) The present stone-rubble house has two storeys, with a long front range with several short projecting wings to the rear and appears to be largely of two builds. The earlier part, which may date from the later 16th century, comprises a backwards L-shaped block on the south, encompassing the present drawing room, hall, and study. The rear room (the present study) was almost certainly heated from the outset, but the fireplaces in the hall and drawing room are probably later additions. Probably in 1616, when a datestone reset next to the present main door was carved, the house was extended northwards with a range apparently comprising two heated rooms on the ground floor, and a single large, heated great chamber above. A stair tower in the angle between the new and older ranges at the rear was probably added at the same time, as were stacks and fireplaces in the older range, and the entire house appears to have been reroofed. A dairy was added to the north of the 17th -century block in the 18th or early 19th century, and a stable bear's a datestone of 1823 with the initials JW, whose owner has not been identified. (fn. 87) During the mid-19th century the farmhouse was occupied by the Hale family, as tenants of the Taunton's; (fn. 88) renovations were carried out in the 1920s for a member of the Batts family, and the house was extended at the rear at each end in the late 20th century.

LESSER ESTATES

RECTORY (PRIORY) ESTATE AND TITHES

In 1183 X 1185 Maud Lovel, with her son William's approval, granted Minster Lovell church and half its endowment to Ivry abbey in Normandy, the other half being reserved for the vicar. (fn. 89) In the 1290s the abbey's estate, then held by the so-called prior of Minster Lovell as the abbey's local representative, was valued at £4 13s. 4d.; (fn. 90) as later, it comprised a yardland of glebe (32 a.), 12 a. of meadow later called Monk Ham, and half the tithes. (fn. 91) As the land of an alien priory it was seized repeatedly by the king during the wars with France from 1337, and in 1414 it was confiscated. (fn. 92) Joan of Navarre held it from 1409 to her death in 1437, when it was leased for 10 years to Sir William

Lovel, the rent being received from 1438 by Humphrey, duke of Gloucester; in 1441, however, the estate, with reversion of the leases, was given by Henry VI to his newly-founded college at Eton (Bucks.), the grant being confirmed the following year. (fn. 93)

From the 16th century or earlier the college leased the estate together with the tithes, of which some were commuted to modus in 1589. (fn. 94) In the 1590s the Rankells, rich clothiers of Witney, rented the estate; (fn. 95) in 1628 the lessee was Edward Heylyn, and in the mid-18th century John, Earl Grandison, and his widow, each of whom sublet it. (fn. 96) In 1840 Eton's share of the tithes was commuted for an annual rent-charge of £119; the estate then comprised some 25 a. of arable and meadow, with adjacent fishing rights. (fn. 97) The estate was sold by Eton College in the early 1920s. (fn. 98)

A 'rectory house' for the estate, mentioned from 1608, was apparently a predecessor of Bridge Cottage, at the entrance to the bridge leading into the southern end of the village. (fn. 99) Possibly it occupied the site of the former 'priory', whose site is otherwise unknown, though the priory is perhaps more likely to have stood near the church and vicarage house.

Titles of Little Minster manor was granted by Roger de Chesney to Eynsham abbey before 1110, a grant confirmed by Henry I that year. (fn. 100) They were estimated at 6s. 8d. in 1254 and at 10s. in the 1270s. (fn. 101) Though still recorded in 1390 the tithes were not mentioned later, (fn. 102) perhaps indicating that the abbey had exchanged them with Eton College for property elsewhere.

Godstow Abbey Estate

Godstow abbey held a yardland in Minster by 1200, and still had farms and rents there at the Dissolution. (fn. 103) In 1545 the Crown granted the land to William Goodwin; it was sold to the Kelway's in 1556, becoming part of the chief manor. (fn. 104) Its origins were still remembered in 1671, when John Wheeler settled on his son a piece of land called 'Godstow Close'.

The village was named Minstre, situated in the ancient hundred of Bampton in 1086.^[5] The dedication of the Church of England parish church to the Saxon Saint Kenelm and the name "Minster" in the toponym suggest that the village may have had a Saxon minster, possibly associated with a Mercian royal vill.^[6] However, the earliest known documentary record of the church is from 1183 and the present St. Kenelm's Church is the product of complete rebuilding in the 15th century.^[6] The suffix "Lovell", from the main landholding family, was added to the name from the 13th century.^[7] In 1197 a William Lovel (died 1213) held land here, probably granted in 1124 to his father William by Henry I.^[8]

The Norman Ivry Abbey had a priory at Minster Lovell by 1226.^[6] Because it was an alien priory, the Crown repeatedly seized its property between 1330 and 1441, until in the latter year Henry VI granted reversion of the priory's possessions to Eton College.^[6] Minster Lovell Hall and Dovecote are extensive ruins of a 15th-century manor house, once belonging to William Lovel's descendant, Lord Lovell. There is a medieval dovecote nearby. There is a legend that in 1708 the skeletal remains of Lord Lovell were discovered in a secret chamber in the manor house. Lord Lovell had fought in the Battle of Stoke in 1487, and had been seen escaping from the battle, but was never afterwards heard of. It is supposed that he had hidden himself there and died of starvation.^[9]

Lord Lovell forfeited his lands to the Crown in 1485, and the property passed through several owners until it was bought in 1603 by Sir Edward Coke. The manor remained in the Coke [Cook] family for several generations, and Thomas Coke, created Baron Lovel in 1728, abandoned Minster Lovell Hall in 1747 and partially dismantled it.^[8] Charterville is the third of the Chartist estates.^[10] 300 acres (120 ha) were divided into 78 smallholdings with model cottages.^[11] 40 oxen and 18 pigs were provided to the winners of the plots, drawn by lot from the shareholders of the National Land Company, along with manure, firewood and seed. The area is still called Charterville Allotments, and the original plots still survive as freehold bungalows set in large gardens.^[12]

Amenities

Minster Lovell has three public houses: the Old Swan,^[13] the White Hart and The Horse & Radish. The River Windrush supports species including trout, chub and crayfish. Only Minster Lovell residents may fish the river at Wash Meadow, and only with a permit issued by the Water Bailiff, whose contact details are available from the Parish Council.^[14] Wash Meadow is an amenity for Minster Lovell residents and sport clubs users only. A public footpath crosses the field to the parish church.

Minster Lovell Cricket Club was founded in 1896.^[15] Its teams play in the Cherwell Cricket League after the club's first team won a treble of OCA League Division 1, Airey Cup and Tony Pullinger T20 Cup in 2016. Minster Lovell won Cherwell League Division 4 at the first attempt in 2017. The first team subsequently gained promotion to Division 2 the following season, but were relegated back to Division 3 in 2019.^[16] The club has a second ground 3 miles (5 km) away at Brize Norton.^[15]

Thomas Coke, (Coke is pronounced "Cook") 1st Earl of Leicester, KB (17 June 1697 – 20 April 1759) was an English land-owner and patron of the arts. He is particularly noted for commissioning the design and construction of Holkham Hall in north Norfolk. Between 1722 and 1728, he was one of the two Members of Parliament for Norfolk. He was honoured by being created first Earl of Leicester, in a recreation of an ancient earldom. He was the son of Edward Coke and Carey Newton. His great-great-great-grandfather was the noted judge and politician Sir Edward Coke. He married Lady Margaret Tufton, 19th Baroness de Clifford, 3rd daughter of Thomas Tufton, 6th Earl of Thanet by his wife Lady Catherine Cavendish. The title of "19th Baroness de Clifford" was eventually granted in favour to her after falling into abeyance between her co-heir sisters. As a young man, Coke embarked on a six-year 'Grand Tour', returning to England in the spring of 1718. During his time in Rome in 1715, he made the acquaintance of Richard Boyle, 3rd Earl of Burlington, the aristocratic architect at the forefront of the Palladian revival movement in England, and of William Kent. Both were later to be engaged by Coke to work on his mansion at Holkham Hall constructed in Palladian style which housed the considerable collection of works of art that Coke had accumulated on his travels. During these travels in 1717, he purchased the Codex Leicester, containing some of the works of Leonardo da Vinci, the Italian artist and scientist.

Coke was later raised to the peerage as Baron Lovel and became known as Lord Lovel on 28 May 1728. However, Coke was badly affected by financial losses when his investments in the South Sea Company proved worthless. This delayed the building of Coke's planned new country estate for over ten years. On top of that, he seemed to have lived a reckless life of drinking, gambling, and hunting,^[2] as well as being a leading supporter of cock fighting.^[3] It was not until around 1732 that Burlington and Kent made their first drawings for the new country house. Norfolk architect Matthew Brettingham was also influential in the design of the mansion (though he attributed the design of the Marble Hall to Coke himself). Work on the foundations began in 1734, but it was to be 30 years before work was completed. As he surveyed the result of his long years of labour and achievement, Lord Leicester lamented: "It is a melancholy thing to stand alone in one's own country. I look around not a house to be seen but my own. I am Giant of Giant Castle and have ate up all my neighbours my nearest neighbour is the King of Denmark."^[4]

Coke, who had been made Earl of Leicester on 9 May 1744, died on 20 April 1759, five years before the completion of Holkham Hall, having never fully recovered his financial losses. Thereafter, his wife Lady Margaret oversaw the completion and furnishing of the house. He had been predeceased by his only son, the rake Edward Coke, Viscount Coke (1719–1753), whose marriage to the diarist Mary Campbell proved disastrous – he virtually imprisoned her at Holkham Hall – and childless.^[5] Therefore, Holkham Hall was inherited by Thomas Coke's nephew Wenman Roberts, the son of Major Philip Roberts and Thomas's sister Anne Coke.

Wenman took the name of Coke after inheriting the Coke estates and was succeeded on his death in 1776 by his son, another Thomas Coke, later 1st Earl of Leicester of Holkham, the MP and agricultural reformer.
